LETTER TO THE MANAGEMENT

---

---

April 20, 2017

Dear Sir/Madam:

I bring to your attention a matter of utmost urgency. While I have been on vacation, the (stinky) Texas Tigers became squatters in my home. They moved my precious art pieces, ruined my daisy garden, and – horror of horrors – peed on the camera installed so my many subjects can receive their daily greeting from their King.

Therefore, before I go home I demand:

- 1 - a thorough steam cleaning be done in my enclosure to remove the Stinky Tiger Smell; some fresh paint would help, as well.
- 2 - a new garden be planted. Besides for the obvious benefit of adding color to my enclosure, we all know that gardens reduce stress – and I think it's obvious that I have been under EXTREME stress from the taunting of the T3 while they squatted in my enclosure. Also, the garden provides a beautiful background for my pictures.
- 3 – the red barrel must be removed and discarded immediately, and replaced with something new, perhaps a nice ball.
- 4 – soothing music must be piped in to help me sleep at night so that I don't have nightmares about the T3 and their shenanigans in my enclosure.

NOTE: Until these requests have been fulfilled, I will be extending my vacation. Don't even THINK of putting that tunnel up. I will not be moved.

Thank you for your attention.

Sincerely,

King Joseph Lion

(Sent via Lori D., Secretary to the Cats and Humble Servant of His Royal Highness, King Joseph Lion)

PS - I also require that the camera lens be cleaned so that my subjects do not think I have jaundice.
